BELFRY, sb. Not. Lin. Som. [be'lfri.]

1. A shed made of wood, sticks, furze, or straw.

Lin. A temporary shed for a cart or waggon in the fields or by the road side, having an upright post at each of the four corners, and covered at the top with straw, &c. (HALL.) n.Lin. Waggon-shed without roof, but covered by a corn rick, MORTON Cyclo. Agric. (1863); n.Lin.¹ In the Inventory of John Nevill, of Faldingworth, taken in 1590, occurs 'the belfrey with other wood xx'.' A complaint was made to a Lindsey justice of the peace, sitting at Winterton in 1873, that the belfry of . . . was ruinous and liable to fall on passers by.

2. A rick stand or 'staddle.'

Not.² The stone pillars which form the supports for the foundation of stacks; also called bandriffs. sw.Lin.¹ They stacked the oats on the new belfry.

3. The room or basement in a tower, from which the bells are rung.

w.Som.¹ The name is not applied to the tower, nor to the room in which the bells are hung. I know several instances in which the ropes pass through the ceilings of the belfry [buul'free] and the clock-chamber above it, to the bells hung in the upper story [bell-chamber] of the tower.

[3. This basement in the tower where the ringers stood was also used (1) as a place where the poor sat, and (2) sometimes as a schoolroom. (1) A poor woman in the belfry hath as good authority to offer up this sacrifice, as hath the bishop in his pontificalibus, LATIMER Serm. (1549) I. 167 (DAV.). (2) Gauden (Tears of the Ch. (1659) 253) speaks of 'teaching school in a belfry' as a means of livelihood for a deprived minister (DAV.).]

Bethowt us we'd have hawve a day at Belle Vue, LAYCOCK Sngs. (1866) 28; Lan.¹ Hast bethowt thi yet? Han yo bethowten yoursells? Aw've seen him afore, that's sartin; but, for mi loife, aw conno bethink me wheer. w.Som.¹ The pres. tense, bethink, is not used except with the meaning, to begrudge: never to express recollection. The strong forms of the pret. and pp. bethought, or freq. bethoughted, are used in the sense of remembered, recollected. They do not necessarily require the reflex. form. 'Hon I come to think it over, I bethoughted all about it.'

2. To remind.

n.Yks.² Wheea bethowt thee?

3. To begrudge; to abstain from.

Som. I did'n bethink'n o't, although a did turn roun' upon me, PULMAN Sketches (1842) 79, ed. 1871; He bethink'd I but every-thing, W. & J. Gl. (1873); An er did bethink I the mossel o' vood, JENNINGS Dial. w.Eng. (1869). w.Som.¹ Ec wid-n nuvur beedhing'k dhu muun'ee [he would never begrudge the money]. Ec ded-n beedhing'k tu au'lur, vur au'l ee ded-n aa'rlee tich oa un [he did not abstain from (or begrudge himself the satisfaction of) crying out (to halloo), though he scarcely touched him]. This phrase means more than this; it implies that he bellowed very loudly for a very slight blow. When used in the above senses the past tense is always formed, either by the periphrastic did, as in the example above given, or by the weak forms of the perf. and past part., and the construction is gen. neg. as above. Cor. That day week I had not a bird left; everybody said they was bethought me, and I suppose they were, HUNT Pop. Rom. w.Eng. (1865) II. 80.

[1. And now I do bethink me, it was she First told me, SHAKS. Twelfth Nt. v. i. 356. 2. Dis word uader þe befengþ þet þou art zone, Ayenbite (1340) 100. 3. That your majesty may never have cause... to withdraw or bethink the liberty given us, Lond. Gaz. (1687) No. 2252 (N.E.D.).]

BEZANT, sb. Obs. Dor. The name of a 'trophy,' and of a festival held in the town of Shaftesbury, or Shaston, on Monday in Rogation week.

Dor. The 'Bezant' was an acknowledgment on the part of the Borough to the Lord of the Manor of Mitcombe for the permission to bring up water for use from the hamlet of Enmore Green. The festival sadly degenerated, and in the year 1830 ceased altogether. The 'Bezant' which gave its name to the festival consisted of a sort of trophy constructed of ribbons, flowers and peacock's feathers, fastened to a frame, about four feet high, round which were hung jewels, coins, medals, &c., lent for the purpose, CHAMBERS Bk. Days (1869) I. 585.

[This use of 'bezant' for an offering may be compared with its use for the name of a certain offering made by the kings of England at the sacrament or at festivals, and by French kings at their coronation; see BLOUNT (1670), s. v. Byzantine.]

[Legal senses of Bond, *sb.*¹]

BOND, *sb.*² Obs.? Nhb. In comp. (1) Bond-darg, a day's labour rendered to the lord of the manor or to the landlord, see Darg; (2) -ryding, the name of some piece of ground which had been ridded or cleared of wood, and for which its owner was bound to do certain services to his lord. Cf. boon, *sb.*²

(1) Nhb.¹ A remarkable custom, derived from the feudal system, is still observed at Great Whittington. The freeholders are obliged to send seven mowers and fourteen reapers to Halton Castle for one day every year, when called upon. It is called the 'bond darg.' The labourers receive no wages, but are plentifully supplied with victuals and drink, MACKENZIE & DENT Hist. Nhb. (1811) 810. (2) Nhb.¹

BONDAGE, sb. Sc. Nhb. Also written bonage, bonnage Sc.

1. Service rendered as part-payment to a land-proprietor by his tenant, or to a farmer by a cottager. Cf. boon, *sb.*²

Kcd. Bonage . . . was exacted either in seed-time, or in ploughing and harrowing the proprietor's land, or in summer in the carriage of his coals, . . . and in harvest in cutting down his crop, Agr. Surv. 213 (JAM.). Nhb. Jane wrought the 'bondage' on the farm where her brother was 'hind,' and worked from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. for the handsome sum of fifteen-pence, WEDDLE Bondager in Gent. Mag. (Nov. 1896) 433; Nhb.¹ A relic of the olden time still lingers under the name of the 'bondage system,' entailing, not serfdom, but the necessity of finding extra labour in field work, ROBERTSON Hist. (1872).

Hence Bondager, sb. a female field-worker whom the hind covenants to supply on his engagement to a farmer.

Sc. Tibby had been a bondager on one of the Hirsell Farms, WHITEHEAD Daft Davie (1876) 100; Every person who held a cottage as part of his or her yearly agreement was bound to provide a full-bodied out-worker or bondager for service on the farm, LUMSDEN Sheep-head, 32; MORTON *Cyclo. ploughing days (M.P.). Wm. (B.K.), ne.Lan.¹ (8) Lan.¹ Many farms are held by leases on three lives . . . and a small annual rent reserved, and sometimes an addition of boon-services, MARSHALL Review (1818) 1. 275. (9) Lan.¹ (10) Lin. N. & Q. (1884) 6th S. x. 74. (11) n.Yks. In the way of boon-work he had to give two days' labour, hoeing or weeding, ATKINSON Old Whitby (1894) 174. Chs. Almost every farmer had formerly to do a certain amount of what was called boon-work, Chs. N. & Q. (1883) III. 7; Chs.¹ Fast becoming obs. In farm agreements of thirty or forty years ago there was almost invariably a clause binding the tenant to do a certain number of days' boon-work for his landlord, the number of days being regulated by the size of the farm. Before the present Highway Act came into force, farmers used to work off a portion or even the whole of their highway rates by doing boon-work upon the roads. It was formerly very much the custom for the farmers in a parish to club together to cart the year's supply of coals for the blacksmith; and this also was spoken of as boon-work. As an equivalent the blacksmith often sharpened the plough irons free of charge; Chs.² In former times the tenant kept a cock for his landlord, and a dog. The landlord's geese and pigs were turned into the tenant's fields after the crops were removed. A tenant also brought his landlord every year a cheese or a goose.

5. v. To render voluntary help to a neighbour.

Der.¹ Rut.¹ To help another, e.g. in getting in hay.

6. To render service for a landlord.

BOOREY, sb. Nhb. Also in forms bowery, brewery Nhb.¹; bowrie e.Dur.¹ [bū'ri, bū'ri.] A ring of marbles; a game at marbles.

Nhb. Aw mun noo set ye on tar in The gam' o' the boorey o' life, Keelman's Ann. (1869) 23; Nhb.¹ A ring is drawn, and on its circumference and in its centre are placed common marbles. The player 'fires' from the 'past,' or starting mark, and all the marbles knocked outside the ring become his own. The marble rests where it has stopped till the next player has had his 'shot.' When all the shots but one have been cleared, the player next in order has the option of 'a lie'; this is done by laying his 'tar' inside the boorey and close to the 'shot.' At his next turn he 'fires' so as to knock out the 'shot' and lay his 'tar' as near as possible to the 'tar' of the player who holds the greatest number of shots, at which he now 'fires,' and if he makes a successful hit, or 'kill,' he wins the game. e.Dur.¹

*w.Yks.*² Four holes are made in the ground, three of them being in a row, and the fourth at some little distance from the others. Two or three boys stand by the fourth hole and bowl their taws in turn to the first of the three holes, and then to the second and third. It is agreed before the game begins that the boy whose taw is the last to get into the last hole must lay his hand on the ground with the knuckles upwards, about three feet from the last hole, to be shot at by the taws of the other boys. This last hole is called the 'old lass.' As soon as the last boy has bowled his taw into the 'old lass' he shouts, 'Knuckle down and bird eggs,' whilst the other boys immediately shout, 'Lights up and no bird eggs,' and the party which is the first to say these words has the choice. If the cry 'Knuckle down and bird eggs' is first heard, the last boy can put his taw between his knuckles, and the other boys must shoot at him with their knuckles in the last hole. Any boy who hits the taw between the knuckles cannot shoot again. If the cry 'Lights up and no bird eggs' is first heard, the boys may put one hand into the hole, and rest the other hand thereon, so that they may shoot with greater force, and in this case the last boy cannot put his taw between his knuckles. Then they each have the full number of shots at the knuckles agreed on at the commencement of the game.

BUSSED, see Burst.

BUSSEL, *sb.*¹ and *v.*¹ Dor. Som.

1. sb. A fellow-piece of a wagon; the iron bar which keeps the framework of a timber-carriage rigid.

Dor. BARNES Gl. (1863) (s.v. Hounds). w.Som.¹ When timber is loaded on a 'top carriage,' the but end always rests on the 'pillar-piece' or 'bolster' of the 'fore carriage'—and inasmuch as the shafts of this kind of truck are hinged, the framework of the carriage has to be supported and kept rigid independently. For this purpose there is a strong iron bar called the buss^l, having a ring sliding loosely upon it, with a short but strong chain attached to this ring. No bussel is required for an 'under-carriage.'

Hence Bussel-chain, sb. a short, strong chain attached to the bussel. w.Som.¹

2. v. To bussel up. See quot.

w.Som.¹ To bussel up is to make fast the bussel-chain to the tree with 'dogs,' so that the front wheels may be able to 'lock' while the 'carriage' may at the same time be held firmly in its place.

BUSY-GAP-ROGUE, sb. Obs. Nhb. A thier, an evilly-disposed person.

Nhb.¹ Busy-gap is a wide break in the ridge of basalt, about a mile from Sewingshields. This was the pass most frequently chosen by the freebooters of the Middle Ages when on their marauding expeditions to the rich valley of the Tyne, and hence it acquired an evil reputation. In Newcastle formerly, to call a brother burgess a Busy-Gap-Rogue was to incur the censure of one's guild, as is attested by an entry in the books of the Company of Bakers and Brewers of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, TOMLINSON Guide (1888) 192.
